

Nick Hopkins – Head of Advanced Technologies, Virgin Media

Nick has been Head of Advanced Technologies at Virgin Media for two years and has been involved in pioneering technology initiatives across the group, most recently working on converged on and off-net next generation TV. Nick joined Virgin Media from Virgin Mobile where he looked after technical strategy as part of the Corporate Strategy function. He found time in 2006 to help launch Virgin Mobile France and was involved a number of other Virgin Mobile launches including the original Virgin Mobile in the UK. Prior to Virgin Mobile, Nick held a number of challenging and sometimes painful positions within consulting organisations such as KPMG and CSC in a variety of (mostly) civilised countries. Even further back in the mists of time, IBM and Xerox served a useful purpose in padding out the CV. The impact of the convergence of the customer with technology has been a constant throughout Nick's career. As have corporate golf days.
