

Oleg Kolesnikov was born in Chelyabinsk on March 22, 1969. He graduated from the Aerophysics and Space Research Department of Moscow Institute of Physics and Technology.

In 1995 Kolesnikov began to work in the sport editors office of NTV broadcasting company.

In 2005 he worked as a Technical director of a broadcasting company NTV-PLUS. Under his supervision it was created continuity rooms for multichannel broadcasting, the electronic video data archiving system. For the first time in Russia High-Definition Television and the broadcasting programs with multichannel Dolby Digital sound were organized.

Besides, it was prepared sport events such as: Summer Olympic games in Atlanta (USA, 1996), Winter Olympic games in Nagano (Japan, 1998), Goodwill games in New York (1998), Summer Olympic games in Sydney (Australia, 2000), Summer Olympic games in Athens (Greece, 2004), Winter Olympic games in Turin (Italy, 2006), the Champions League final in Moscow (2008), Summer Olympic games in Beijing (China, 2008).